Barton Academy Notes.

Miss Katherine Aagesen, state supervisor of teacher training classes, was in town last week to inspect the training class here. She expressed herself as well pleased with the class and stated that it was the largest one-year class in the state, and if more students were enrolled the state would send an assistant teacher here.

The regular meeting of the school board will be held in the principal's office this evening at 7.30 o'clock.

Mrs. Mildred Daniels is substituting in the fifth grade in place of Mrs. Fred Kinsey, who taught the first two weeks.

There have been several new enrollments in the high school. The school board wishes to thank the people of Barton for the hearty response to the appeal made for assistance in finding boarding and rooming places for teachers and students. At the last it was found that there were more places than could be filled, though there are still several young people who would like to work for their board or find some work to do.

FAIR NOTES

Where a few years ago hundreds of horses were hitched to rails provided inside the oval, few horses were inside the circle this year and the number tied to the fence along the west side of the grounds was very small. The day of the horse as a means of transporting people to the fair has gone forever—and it was only a few years ago many a team drove out to the fair grounds and automobiles inside the fair grounds it would kill the fair. Some of the same men who now drive fine cars said this, too. Surely times do change.

The cavalcade of premium stock was just half a mile long and a handsome cavalcade it was.

Business booths all report business as dull. While the crowds were good and weather fine, there were many people after the businesses and people are feeling the pinch of the times and did not spend as freely as in former years.

Fakirs' row was what the name implies. There was plenty of it. The wheels were numerous but the monagement assures us they were all playing within the law. The blanket man appears to have done the largest business.

Much favorable comment was heard about the band music, both on Wednesday when the Barton band played and Thursday when the Orleans band furnished music. There are two good organizations, not fully appreciated by their home towns.

Campbell's animal circus arrived late Thursday and set up their tents near the cattle shed. Audiences both afternoon and evening were not large but the show was considered a very good circus for a small one. The price of admission charged was criticized as being too much for the size of the show.

The writer saw but one solitary sign of liquor in any way, shape or manner. One man a bit unbalanced, a mighty fine record. There were those who tried to bring liquor in but the amount getting through was so small as to be negligible.

The stage attractions may not have been the best ever, but they were clean. Singer Robins presented a new form of outdoor entertainment with his strong voice accompanied by the band. The trained dogs and geese amused the children and the tight rope acrobats were passable.

The trace of corn in the Glover Grange booth was raised by Frank Phillips of Glover, the corn being planted May 19 on broken up ground with a table-spoon of chemicals in each hill and no other fertilizer. The corn was picked September 3.

James F. LaBounty.
